He is in a big trouble as public opinion in the US is overwhelmingly against and it is not clear that DC is in support.
As nobody can figure out Assad reaction (why not giving Hizbullah chemical arms and let them use it against us-Israel or hitting US base in Turkey) , and then in the midst of that Obama is going to St Petersburg for G20 and may face very hostile reaction !

UK's Cameron loses parliamentary vote on Syria military action
30-Aug-2013 00:50

LONDON, Aug 29 (Reuters) - British Prime Minister David Cameron lost a symbolic but important parliamentary vote on Thursday night meant to pave the way for Britain to join a looming military strike on Syria.

Cameron said after the 285 to 272 vote he would not override the will of parliament and approve such action, saying it was clear that parliament did not want to see a military strike on Syria to punish it for chemical weapons use, adding that he would act accordingly.
